Social Security Disability Tip of the Month

Your Medical Doctors Are Your Best Friends When You Need to File, Receive or Maintain Your Disability Benefits

Your medical doctors are your most important allies when filing for, receiving or maintaining your disability benefits. You need them to substantiate your disability and to provide concrete medical opinions and evidence to prove why you are no longer able to work.

Seeing your doctors on a periodic basis and staying under regular medical treatment is essential. We cannot over emphasize the importance of following your doctor's advice and your prescribed treatment plans. Not doing this can have extreme negative consequences and result in loss of benefits.

When Social Security finds you disabled it doesn't mean it's permanent. They have the right to review any case to see if you are still disabled and entitled to benefits. During a review Social Security will always ask for medical evidence and a list of doctors so they can get up to date evidence. We advise our clients to stay under regular medical treatment so medical evidence is easily obtained.

Unfortunately most medical problems that lead to a disability don't improve significantly. The best way to prove this is to stay under regular medical treatment.

Remember it's simple; our best advice is to stay current with your doctors.
